

The project proposes an approach to regenerating the modernist district of La Paillade, a satellite of Montpellier, without gentrification. It is structured around four guiding axes: Community, Mobility, Functional Diversity, and Spatial Hierarchy. Through precise and measured interventions, existing and projected community infrastructure is interconnected to reinforce collective life. The strategy restructures the territory through district sub-division, the definition of hierarchical axes and nodes, and the consolidation of a coherent system of public open space and green infrastructure. Incremental densification, adaptive reuse, and calibrated mixed-use infill strengthen spatial continuity, public transport accessibility, environmental performance, and long-term social sustainability.
